The developing world faces an enormous task in tackling the unmet needs of reproductive health, reducing maternal and infant mortality and curbing the spread of HIV/AIDS. Although some progress has been made, much remains to be done to build capacity to address these challenges more effectively and efficiently. Leadership is needed from all levels (community, scientific, political, etc.) to strengthen the linkages between MCH/FP services and HIV programs, maximizing the utilization of scarce human and financial resources by sharing facilities and rationalizing staff responsibilities; promoting client satisfaction, efficiency, and effectiveness by reducing duplication of services; and minimizing missed opportunities.
