

Appendix A. Programs Included in the Agency Performance Report, 1996

For purposes of reporting the results of USAID programs in 1996, we have classified programs in three groups:

- 1. Sustainable development country programs 39
- 2. Transition country programs 31
- 3. Other country programs 16

Most of the tables in this report are based on information from 86 countries: 39 sustainable development, 31 transition, and 15 others for which we have performance data for 1996 included in the performance monitoring database.

Details of program performance are taken from their current strategic plans and the annual performance reports submitted by each Mission between January and July 1996. These data have been supplemented with information from evaluation reports and special studies and direct communications with Missions.

Results of the regional and centrally managed programs are reported in the appropriate section of each chapter. Information was collected in the same way for these programs.

Definitions of Program Categories and Notes

Sustainable development programs. Programs that principally address one or more of the following sustainable development goals: economic growth, democracy, population and health, environment, and humanitarian assistance. These programs are conducted in countries having an excellent chance of achieving both financial and environmental sustainable development. Additional factors are also considered. These include minimum population size, higher-than-threshold real income, the political- and human-rights situation, and the potential for significant impact of donor assistance.

Transition programs. Programs that address problems arising in countries during their transition from centrally planned economies to market economies and from man-made and natural disasters to sustainable development.

Other country programs. Programs that do not fit into the sustainable development and transition groups. Their objectives address foreign policy concerns, global concerns, or other overriding issues.
